Before the taking of testimony was begun Chairman Pujo read a statement prepared by the committee and counsel in executive session at the Plaza Hotel, asserting that after hearings as to the coperations of the New York Clearing House and Stock Exchange have been concluded in this city next week, the committee will adjourn until next fall. The reason assigned for this determination was two-fold. The committee perceives it to be not desirable to carry on the investigation in "the heat and excitiement of a Presidential campaign." It also deems it unadvisable to test its inquisitorial powers too far until the amendatory legislation passed by the House and now being held up in the Senate shall have been enacted into law and the President.

Can Refuse Membership.

Should even the strongest bank or trust company in the city be taken over by mew owners it would not necessarily retain its membership in the association. The Clearing House committee could refuse without cause to permit the old member that had fallen into new hands to remain a member.

Thirteen years ago the clearing house committee arbitrarily fixed the fees to be charged by all its members and "nonmembers" for the collection of out-ofton checks. The first year of the operation of this arbitrary rule yielded Expension of this arbitrary rule yielded Expension of the money trust. Last year it yielded around $50,000,000, this for the mere cashing of checks sent into New York by out-of-town banks.

When the Clearing House Association was established in 1851 it had a bank membership of fifty-two. Its present bank membership is only fifty, although in the fifty-ninth years of the life of the association the city's business has contended, has not the express sanction of law for its acquisition of the majority of the stock of the George town Company. It was further asserted in controversion of the allegation of inconsistency that the Washington Gaslight Company would not have been permitted to vote on the bond issue unless it had voted with the minority holders who favored the issue.

The vote of the majority in favor of the bond issue was an acquiescence rather than an exercise of discretion, and was not actually an exercise of franchise, a minority partisan said last night.
